Ans

A citizen of a country is an individual recognized under the custom (or) law as being a legal member of a sovereign nation to a government in exchange for its protection, whether at home (or) abroad. A citizen is one of the dominant pillars of the country.

It is time, we the citizens of India, understood our own role and responsibility in limiting the spread and transmission of the current situation that is covid-19.

To expect our people to show total conformity to the preventive measures against covid-19, announced by the Indian government is, in fact, to expect a little too much. Some of the mandatory measures such as wearing a mask in public spaces, social distancing, self isolation (or) quarantining and getting tested if showing symptoms are some of the important guidelines we are expected to follow. Apart from this, we are also expected to wash our hands frequently; sanitize our living and work spaces, including the surfaces we frequently we get into contact.

Through some people follow these guidelines scrupulously a majority of Indians

We don't think twice before flouting them. We have noticed how social distancing is not always maintained when people are present in public spaces. Something as simple as a mask is often not worn because people say it's unhealthy (or) that it is not going to make much of a difference. There have been other more disturbing violations such as people easily escaping from hospitals while quarantined (or) other turning violent when questioning why they were not following the protocol. Initially, when the pandemic had just struck, people also made a deliberate attempt to hide their symptoms. Cases of mass congregation, parties (or) social get-togethers too were reported.

This brings us to a pertinent question. How are people expected to conduct themselves in critical times? Are we, as a society, expected to behave responsibly or irresponsibly? Even when things are normal, we Indians, take special delight in flouting norms or the rules, without bothering about our communities and adopting a 'me first' approach, not thinking twice about jumping the queue (or) the red-light (or) worrying about accidents (or) inconvenience caused to others.

We also have no respect for the law of the land, a fact demonstrated by Indian police using lathis to force them to stay indoors during lockdown. It was only the fear of the red, not concern for others, that kept people from stepping out of their home.
